1. Rest in Power Katherine Johnson

From: JoEllen McBride via womeninastronomy.blogspot.com

"It is always difficult when a hero passes on. But celebrating their accomplishments, and the path they paved for others, is a great way to empower future generations of scientists. Katherine Johnson, a NASA mathematician whose calculations help send astronauts into Earth orbit and eventually to the Moon, passed away earlier this week."

2. NASA Dual-Anonymous Peer Review Town Hall

From: JoEllen McBride via womeninastronomy.blogspot.com

NASA's Astrophysics Division held a virtual Town Hall on February 27, 2020, at 1pm ET to discuss the implementation of dual-anonymous peer review for the Astrophysics General Observer and General Investigator (GO/GI) programs. A second Town Hall will be held on Tuesday, March 3 at 12:30pm to discuss the four conventional ROSES programs.

3. Memorialized on Mercury: A Monument to the Life and Work of Maya Angelou

From: JoEllen McBride [joellen.mcbride_at_gmail.com]

By Jordan M. Bretzfelder

"As we celebrate Black History Month, there is no better time to remember the life and work of the poet, memoirist, dancer, singer, actress, and civil rights activist Maya Angelou (1928-2014). This year, her legacy deserves extra attention. On September 19th, 2019, 50 years after the publication of her most famous work and first autobiography, I Know Why The Caged Bird Sings, a new and permanent monument to her contributions to literature and the arts was approved by the International Astronomical Union (a.k.a the IAU). You may be wondering what outer space has to do with the first Black woman to publish a nonfiction best seller."

4. 37 Women Who've Upended Science, Tech, and Engineering For the Better
From: JoEllen McBride [joellen.mcbride_at_gmail.com]

By Courtney Linder

"From Grace Hopper to Elizabeth Magie, these are the inventors who have shaped STEM as we know it."

5. Astronomy Expands Its Scope From the Heavens to Humans
From: JoEllen McBride [joellen.mcbride_at_gmail.com]

By Sarah Scoles

"Every 10 years, astronomers weigh in on the state of their field. For the first time, they're tackling Earth-centric issues like gender bias and diversity."

6. The woman who explained the stars
From: JoEllen McBride [joellen.mcbride_at_gmail.com]

By Giuseppina Fabbiano

"Public acclaim escaped one of the twentieth century's most illustrious astronomers, Cecilia Payne-Gaposchkin; a new biography sets her in the firmament."

7. Study: Gender Inequality Persists in Science Careers and Publishing
From: Alessandra Aloisi [alosisi_at_stsci.edu] and JoEllen McBride [joellen.mcbride_at_gmail.com]

By Lois Elfman

"Four scientists, Dr. Albert-László Barabási, Dr. Alexander J. Gates, Dr. Roberta Sinatra and Dr. Junming Huang, have taken a new approach to examining gender differences in scientific disciplines in academia. They had seen evidence that female scientists publish fewer articles throughout their careers and their work receives fewer citations. To build a comprehensive picture, they opted for a longitudinal analysis of academic publishing."

8. The Activist Group MeTooSTEM Is Facing Allegations Of Harassment Against Its Own Leader

By Peter Aldous

"Two individuals on the group's three-person leadership team have resigned, a week after one of them wrote to the group's governing board calling for MeTooSTEM's controversial founder, BethAnn McLaughlin, to step down. The two leaders, Angela Rasmussen and Teresa Swanson, had backed a Chinese American MeTooSTEM volunteer, Jaedyn Ruli, who complained that McLaughlin had harassed them. Ruli has also resigned from the group."

9. 'The spark has ignited.' Latin American scientists intensify fight against sexual harassment

From: Alessandra Aloisi [aloisi_at_stsci.edu]

By Lindzi Wessel, Rodrigo Perez Ortega

"For decades, from his base at the University of Los Andes (Uniandes) in Bogota, Colombia, biologist Adolfo Amezcuita Torres made his name studying the diverse, jewel-like poisonous frogs of the Andes and the Amazon. But on campus, he compiled a darker record, former and current students have alleged in dozens of complaints. They say he mistreated women, including by favoring and emotionally abusing female students he was dating and retaliating against those who rejected his advances or complained about his behavior. Earlier this month, university officials concluded he was guilty of sexual harassment and misconduct and fired him in a watershed moment for the university—and for a growing effort to fight sexual misconduct on campuses across Latin America."
